What Lens Is Best Suited to Your Conditions?

Cycling sunglasses use specific types of lens technology to adapt to certain weather conditions. This could be road racing in full sun or trail riding in low light. It all depends on the conditions you cycle in and your own personal preference.

Sunny

Oakley's PRIZM Road, Rudy Project's Multilaser Red & Smith's ChromaPop Lenses.

All-Weather

When it comes to lenses that are suitable for a range of weather conditions, it is best to check out lighter contrast tints as they help offer a bright field of vision. Photochromic lenses are also versatile as they darken when exposed to certain levels of brightness.

Look out for:

Oakley's PRIZM Trail, Rudy Project's ImpactX 2 Photochromic & Smith's ChromaPop Contrast Rose.

Overcast

Rose lenses offer you incredible depth perception in environments that are primarily green or yellow – perfect for cycling in cloudy or wooded conditions. Another overcast option is photochromic lenses. These lenses transition from light to dark depending on the surroundings.

Look out for:

Oakley's PRIZM Trail, Rudy Project's ImpactX 2 Photochromic & Smith's ChromaPop Contrast Rose.

The Shield

You have most likely seen professional cyclists donning shield sunglasses. This is because of the high-profile design that sits taller than other frames. It bridges the gap between the helmet and the eyewear – perfect for maximum visibility when you are on the drops.

The Half Rim

Our selection of half-rim sunglasses are incredibly popular with cyclists because of their interchangeable lenses. They are a brilliant choice for those who ride in all weather conditions. Plus they often come with a selection of different lenses that you can quickly change depending on your conditions.

Key Features

As you are scrolling through our selection of cycling sunglasses, you will see lots of shades that have been built with these performance-boosting features.

Photochromic

These lenses adapt their transparency to varying light conditions – ideal for cyclists who ride through changing conditions, such as dawn or dusk.

Interchangeable Lenses

Many of our cycling sunglasses come with interchangeable lenses that feature different lens options for different conditions.

Vented

Vented lenses have been road-tested by plenty of professional and non-professional cyclists. Their unique design works to encourage airflow and prevent fogging.

Nose Pieces

Nose and high grip pieces assist you with the fit. They come as fixed or adjustable and help to provide you with additional grip for safe and secure wear.

Frame

All of our cycling sunglasses have been built using lightweight and durable materials. They also include elements within the frame to ensure they stay on your face.

impact resistant polycarbonate and see optical solutions that are best suited to your lifestyle.

Directly Glazed

The streamlined and stylish option

For full functionality without any fuss, our directly glazed prescription sunglasses are a great place to start. Due to the design of these lenses, you have an unobstructed view and you will not lose any of your peripheral vision. The directly glazed option offers you ultimate corrective vision but without having to compromise on that classic sunglasses appearance.

The Full Frame

A hybrid frame for both sport and daily wear

The full frame design is split into two different styles: sports and lifestyle. You will find hybrid full-frame sunglasses that not only look good but can also be worn for some sports, plus sporting frames which are specifically designed for high-impact activities. Full frames offer unbeatable durability and protection, plus they are a great option for supporting thicker prescription lenses.

- 1. After you have placed your order for varifocals, we will send you a 'dummy frame' and useful guide – you only need a camera.
- 2. Hold your camera at arm's length and make sure that it is at eye level. Look directly into the lens and take your photo.

Driving

Whether you are checking a route on your Sat-Nav or keeping your eyes peeled for sharp bends, varifocals are great at helping you focus your vision on more than just the road.

Fishing

Varifocal lenses will give you the flexibility to keep your eyes focused when up close attaching your hookbaits but they also offer you clear vision when casting a line.

Sailing

No matter if you are working up close tying bowline knots or looking out reading the texture of the water, you need clear visibility at sea and varifocals offer you just that and more.

The Science Behind Varifocals

Once you reach your forties, your eyes start to change as the muscles start to get weaker. This causes fatigue and normal deterioration of your close sight. A simple solution for this is to wear a pair of varifocal lenses.

Varifocal lenses work by combining your distance, intermediate and near vision so you have the ability to see all distances with one lens. The very top of the lens allows you to see clearly into the distance, while the middle incorporates your intermediate vision. The bottom of the lens has been specifically designed to help you with near-vision tasks such as reading. Unlike bifocals, varifocal lenses offer your vision a far more natural experience and are seamlessly integrated to look like single-vision lenses.
